Staines is a prosperous market town on the banks of the Thames at the point where the river Colne joins the main stream. It boasts a considerable antiquity being identical with the Roman Ad Pontes. In the vicinity is the "London Stone," a rough column raised on a pedestal, marking the boundary of the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor of London (now the Thames Conservancy). St. Peter's Church, on the river's bank, is a handsome edifice recently erected by Sir Edward and Lady Clarke at a cost of £10,000.
